LEADERSHIP

Leadership is an inexhaustible topic. Thousands of books have been written about it; however, this information overload often serves to dilute the fundamentals.

This class seeks to provide participants with the fundamental principles of leadership

The instructors are widely read and experienced in the topic and distill the vast quantities of information about leadership into a logical progression of information that is both compelling and actionable. Our goal is to give you practical tools you can use immediately to improve your leadership proficiency.

Throughout the course of this class, the student will:

- Develop goals related to personal leadership – we cannot effectively lead others until we first start to lead ourselves
- Describe actions they can take to create an atmosphere of positive trust and accountability
- Identify practical principles of effective communication
- Identify specific behaviors that create a positive culture
- Describe the value-based practices of leadership and management
- Create specific action-based goals related to servant leadership
- Identify, through stories, the traits and attributes of transformational and inspirational leaders and teams
